LOUISE CHAMPION

Preview: 3 October
6 October – 19 December

Louise's paintings have a warmth as well as a sense of loneliness. All this emanating from a image of a railing.

Her graphic depictions of deserted elements, ostracized from their architectural parents, draw you into their space.

Subjects include container terminals, New York subway seats and Safeways car park railings, selected and drawn out of their busy surroundings.

'Turning a Corner' is her first solo show and contains work inspired from her travels through America, Canada and Dartford.

"Over the last few years my paintings have developed from being very two-dimensional shapes to include more details, giving them more substance and three dimensionality, making them actual 'sites' allowing the viewer to become involved in places that are generally overlooked or perceived as mundane."

Notes to editors:

Nancy Victor seeks out unknown and inventive artists. Nancy Victor is the only independent gallery space in Central London that exists outside traditional commercial pressures.

The design group Navig8 (www.navig8the.net) provided the space, support and incentive for the gallery.
